

Fall 2020 has certainly been different:

Who would have ever thought that masks and social distancing would have been in our conversations as we began a new semester. Even though it has been different, our faculty and staff have been creative in our delivery of classes. We introduced synchronous learning to our campus and I truly believe it will change the landscape of how we deliver classes in higher education. We want to continue that progressive thinking as we prepare for spring semester with early registration just a few weeks away. We are in the middle of second eight-week classes and we are preparing for our College for the Holiday classes that have proven successful for our students. While it has been an unusual year and so many have endured heartache and hardships in this pandemic, we still have much for which to be thankful. Know that you are making a difference in people's lives. Thank you for all you do and for being that beacon of light and hope for so many.
